Actually Lifted Itself But Wouldn't Stay Up.

MACHINE WAS NOT INFLATED

Was Found That Rotary Fans Brought Downward Currents of Air.

All the commanders desired to know what the enemy was doing, and Mr. Serrell says that "when the astronomer, and 2401 Brightwood ave. eneral Mitchell, commanded at Por Royal during the civil war, the matter was discussed with his chief engineer officer, who brought forward the propoition to make a machine with flation, and exhibited a tin model that cound up with a string and handle and spun like a humming top and would fly into the air 100 feet or more, vertically, into the air to feet of more exerted upon according to the force exerted upon Sons, 718 7th st. nw.

1t and would carry a bullet or two if Sons, 718 7th st. nw. and would carry a bullet or two if the string was pulled hard enough.

Butler Impressed.

General Mitchell died, and, upon see-ng what the tin toy did, General Butler expressed the belief that a machine could be built to navigate the air. Drawings were made, the theory being "to imitate the little tin model and add to its gliding planes. The drawings, coording to Mr. Serrell, "showed four ans to lift, two above an engine, two below, and two fans to propel and one in front and one behind; the ear fan on a shaft that moved in a horizontal segment, so as to change the direction of the push, and make the rear fan not only a propeller, but a rud-der at the same time. Across the machine was to be a horizontal shaft, on which on either side of the machine were to be gliding planes and automatic balancing balls. These were to slide in and out so as to maintain an equilibrium."

To Be Cigar Shaped.

The body of the machine was to be bout fifty-two feet long and shaped like a thick cigar. It was to contain fuel and water and a high-pressure boiler and engine. From the middle of the body a weight was to be hung so arranged that might be lifted or lowered like the legs of a bird.

Private subscribers offered to pay for the machine, and Mr. Serrell says: The first thing done was to make an eighteen inches in diameter, rotate it at different speeds, and see how much could lift. It was found that very con-lerable weight could be lifted, and to try what could be done on a large scale was made, the blades of the thinnest sheet iron that could be procured, and rotation by belt was provided.

"Centrary to expectation, when the fan was first rotated at great speed in a foundry that had a high roof, the weight that could be lifted was much more than the wheel itself, some 600 pounds or more, and then within forty seconds of time the wheel and the weights would drop back to where they started from, it mattered not how fast the fan was driven. vas made, the blades of the thinnes tion that the fan wheel of any size, when nearly or quite as fast as the pitch of $4,000 the fan, hence it would lift nothing.

ward current of air that soon became nearly or quite as fast as the pitch of the fan, hence it would lift nothing. When, however, the fan was mounted at the outer end of a long boom, which revolved around a mast, so as to constantly bring the fan into new air, its lifting capacity never deserted it and bore a certain ratio to the velocity, and data were accumulated for proportioning the machine.

"The questions involved seemed to be the size of the fan, the shape of the blade, the power required, the weight of the engine, bolier, fuel and water to develop the power. There were no dynamos or storage batteries, liquid air engines or sources of powerful energy using lightweight machines, and the only prime motor sufficiently reliable was the steam engine. To get the strongest and lightest was the problem. It is true that carbonic acid had been liquefied some years before then, but no one knew how to harness it. "Having determined the probable force wanted, the question remained of how to get and maintain pressure enough upon the piston of the engine. A great many experiments were made, but the needful force of steam was not reached before the coming of Appomattox."

Miss Horner charges that she was assaulted by a negress, and although the conductor had ample opportunity to prevent the assault he failed to do so. The nervous shock resulting is alleged to have impaired Miss Horner's health.

A colored woman boarded the car, and, finding no seats, deliberately scated herself in Miss Horner's lap, where she remained until Miss Horner rose and relinquished her seat.
